

Corona publication proudly presents its new e-magazine “Emerging Trends in Science & Technology”. The magazine will compile original articles from prominent researchers, working in Asia and also from abroad that corroborate with the theme of emerging and non-conventional research.

There are a lot of exciting research activities carried out within the Asian nations that go beyond the conventional walls of science and technology. However, there is a dearth of platforms through which these research activities can be disseminated to the target audiences and policy-makers. To bridge this gap, the annual magazine “Emerging Trends in Science & Technology” will serve an important role. A limited number of research articles (not more than 50) are planned for the 2018 edition of the magazine that will be published online as well as in the form of re-prints for offline distribution.

Note: There will be no publication charges for the magazine.
